International Museum Workers Day IMWD was founded in 2015 as a year-round project, as well as an annual advocacy event. Initiated by Iranian-American museologist, artist and playwright Homa Taj Nasab, IMWD's mission is to introduce the general public to the myriad professions relating to the creation, research, discovery and presentation of heritage.

The project's original title was somewhat light-heartedly named Hug A Museum Worker #HAMuseumW.

... After spending the first two years explaining to museum audiences that 'hugging' museum workers was not to be taken literally, to the relief of many heritage workers, the event was re-named International Museum Workers Day #IMWD2017.

Leading up to IMWD2017, we took the initiative to personally inviting art, design, heritage and museum workers as well as institutions and associations, in 192 countries.

Though IMWD was initially launched as a social media project, we continue to directly reach out to tens of thousands of heritage professionals – rather than solely depend on social media's serendipitous, unpredictable (& unregulated) net. In its third year, heritage professionals from 150+ countries engaged with IMWD2017 – including:

Bhutan, Azerbaijan, Slovakia, Tajikistan, Moldova, Chad, Indonesia, Sri Lanka, Tonga, Mozambique, Ghana, Cameroon, Belize, Oman, Madagascar, Jordan, Swaziland (Eswatini), Botswana, Congo, Jamaica, Nepal, Kazakhstan, Zimbabwe, Benin, Vietnam, Papua New Guinea, Suriname, Brunei, Haiti, Cote d'Ivoire, Malaysia, Burkina Faso, Togo, Dominican Republic, Mali, Rwanda, Chad, Senegal, South Africa, Yemen ... as well as throughout the Americas and Europe.

SUSTAINABLE HERITAGE.

As a researcher in the natural history museum, we rush to the site where whales and dolphins strand whenever possible. There, we examine the carcasses for the messages they convey in their body and collect specimens. These will reveal their background which otherwise be hidden behind. The specimens, as the heritage, should be maintained in the museum and will be open to researchers of the world to re-examine and discuss together. These will provide the evidence of the fascinating facts. Can you imagine, in the 21st Century, whales of about 11m were not recognized? We should train our observation eyes. As a tool to extend our knowledge into the diversity of nature surrounding us. We have to maintain the specimens as heritage. We museum workers should work hard to maintain specimens to be utilized by researchers from all over the world.

Challenges brought about by the Covid-19 Pandemic further sealed our commitment to advocating for an appreciation of sports heritage in ways that will give stakeholders a better understanding of their place in contemporary society. We believe that promoting sports - its culture, history and heritage -, as a form of intangible heritage, may be regarded as an added tool for cultivating the ability to make informed, strategic decisions toward balancing and optimizing the impact of policy options and priorities at different levels. This is why we invited sports, culture, heritage professionals around the world to join the 1st GSHD Global Sports Heritage Day on February 22, 2021.
